Gitmo Has Got To Go

Letter to the Editor
Philadelphia Daily News
June 10, 2005

MICHELLE Malkin's (column, June 6) advise to us that most abuses at Guantanamo have been fabricated is made problematic by the Bush administration's refusal to grant habeas corpus to any of the detainees. Reports of abuse verified by the United States military can hardly be ridiculed as fabrications. The involvement of Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez in justifying torture abroad and torture by proxy has been an embarrassment and a disgrace.

The notion that prisoners already incarcerated for three years have information of such urgent necessity as to justify continued mistreatment and isolation is the kind of sociopathic paranoia more appropriate for television fiction like "24" than for living in the real world. Every day that the Guantanamo detention center continues to exist is a blot on the United States and its record of support for human rights and the benign treatment of prisoners.
